Labour International Executive Committee notes that:

- LI branches, campaigns and party groupings, including Young Labour, already submit policy motions to the Labour International General Committee (LIGC).
- Bills introduced before Parliament often require timely, detailed and practical engagement from Labour parliamentarians.
- A more comprehensive LI position on such bills could support Labour MPs, members of the House of Lords, and Labour media groups by setting out LI's policy perspective, concerns and suggested improvements.

Labour International Executive Committee proposes to the LIGC that:

- In addition to existing policy motions, LI branches, campaigns and party groupings should be able to propose more comprehensive positions on bills that have been introduced before Parliament.
- Such positions should be clearly distinct from ordinary policy motions, should focus on a single bill, and should include the bill's title, a summary of LI's position, key issues of concern, and any proposed amendments or improvements.
- Any such position must be considered and approved by the LIGC before it can be described as an LI position or circulated externally.
- Labour International Executive Committee therefore recommends to the Labour International General Committee that:
    - In addition to existing policy motions, LI branches, campaigns and party groupings, including Young Labour, may submit comprehensive proposed positions on bills introduced before Parliament.

Each proposed parliamentary-briefing position shall identify:

- the bill and its parliamentary stage;
- LI's overall position on the bill;
- the main issues LI wishes to highlight;
- any specific amendments, safeguards or improvements LI supports; and
- Where the LIGC approves such a position, the resulting parliamentary briefing may be distributed to Labour MPs, members of the House of Lords, and Labour media groups.

The LIEC shall develop proportionate procedural guidance for submission, scrutiny, approval, formatting and distribution of these briefings, ensuring that they are accurate, timely and clearly identified as positions of Labour International CLP rather than the Labour Party as a whole.
